ABM is pleased to announce that it will be exhibiting at the annual conference of the Police Superintendents' Association of England and Wales. The conference, which runs from 14th-17th September, brings together senior police officers from England and Wales to hear lectures on issues such as serious and organised crime, police leadership and the challenges of policing in the recession. The Home Secretary, Alan Johnson, will also be addressing the conference.

ABM is pleased to continue supporting this important event as it serves to further the performance, efficiency and quality of policing in the UK – a theme that is central to ABM's software solutions.

More information about the Police Superintendents' Association of England and Wales and the conference is available online at www.policesupers.com
